How we work.

Ethically, respectfully and professionally

The Master Plumbers' Association of Tasmania has an approved Code of Ethics which sets out how we encourage and support the highest standards of business conduct.

Our Code of Ethics is issued to members so that, together, we can strive for the improvement of the plumbing industry and the development of those personal and business attributes which are the basis of all good trading relations. In all matters relating to the interpretation of the Code, members shall recognise the authority of the Association and its Constitution.

The health and wellbeing of the Tasmanian community, as it is affected by all branches of the plumbing trade, is paramount and shall be protected to the best of our members' ability. The task of raising the living standards of the Tasmanian community is entrusted to the members of the Association and in fulfilling this responsibility our Master Plumbers are expected to:

- observe the highest standard of honesty and integrity in all aspects of business ;
- work co-operatively and respectfully with fellow members; and
- follow the best practices of the trade, to provide efficient service in compliance with all relevant legislation.
